Three measures to enhance economic cooperation in the US and China will be proposed at the upcoming US-China Strategic Dialogue, which is scheduled to be held in Beijing.

The three measures include promoting economic and technical cooperation between the US and China, increasing trade and investment between the two countries, and enhancing cooperation in the fields of energy, environment, and health.

The US-China Strategic Dialogue is scheduled to be held in Beijing on March 18 and 19. A high-level delegation from the US, led by Secretary of State John Kerry, will attend the dialogue.

China and the US are the world's two largest economies and major trading partners. The two countries have a strong economic interdependence and互补性, and their cooperation has a significant impact on global economic development.

China has been working hard to create a favorable environment for foreign investment, and the US has been actively investing in China. The US-China Strategic Dialogue provides a platform for the two countries to discuss and cooperate on economic and trade issues.

The two countries are expected to sign a number of economic cooperation agreements during the dialogue, including agreements on trade, investment, and technology.

Nonetheless, despite the progress in economic cooperation, there are still some challenges that need to be addressed. One of the main issues is the US's trade deficit with China, which has been a subject of concern for many years.

The US-China Strategic Dialogue will provide an opportunity for the two countries to address this issue and find ways to reduce the trade deficit.

In addition to economic cooperation, the US and China will also discuss other important issues, including climate change, cybersecurity, and non-proliferation.

Overall, the US-China Strategic Dialogue is expected to be a significant event that will promote economic cooperation and strengthen the relationship between the two countries. The two countries are expected to make significant progress in addressing economic and trade issues during the dialogue.
